

Refurbished laptop buyer's checklist

12 checks before you pay for a refurbished business laptop, from any seller

A good refurbished laptop can do the same job as a new one for much less. These checks help you tell a properly reconditioned unit from a used one with a clean screen.

- ☐ 1. It's clearly marked "reconditioned"
South Africa's Consumer Protection Act requires reconditioned goods to be clearly marked as reconditioned. If the listing hides it, ask why.
- ☐ 2. You know what the grade means
"Grade A" means different things at different sellers, and grades describe looks, not performance. Ask for the seller's definition in writing.
- ☐ 3. It was tested, not just wiped
Ask what testing the unit went through before sale: keyboard, screen, ports, battery, storage.
- ☐ 4. Battery health is known
On a Windows laptop, open Command Prompt and run `powercfg /batteryreport`. Compare "full charge capacity" with "design capacity".
- ☐ 5. The battery is covered
Many sellers exclude the battery from the warranty. Check whether it's covered, and for how long.
- ☐ 6. Warranty length and what happens if it fails
Get the warranty period, whether a faulty unit is repaired or replaced, and what isn't covered (for example accidental or liquid damage).
- ☐ 7. Specs match the listing
Check processor generation, memory and storage in Settings, System, About. "i5" alone says little: 8th gen and 12th gen are very different machines.
- ☐ 8. Genuine Windows, activated
Check Settings, System, Activation. Windows 11 officially needs an Intel 8th-generation processor or newer.
- ☐ 9. Previous owner's data is gone
You should get a fresh Windows installation with no old accounts, files or company software.
- ☐ 10. Charger included and correct
A missing or underpowered charger is a common extra cost. Confirm it's in the box.
- ☐ 11. Returns policy in writing
Know how many days you have to report a problem and what condition the unit must be in to return it.
- ☐ 12. Check it on delivery, and get a VAT invoice
Open the box and check the laptop before you sign. Note any damage on the delivery note. Businesses need a valid VAT invoice.

How Poseidon answers each check
